Andrew Kreps Gallery is pleased to announce I Plan to Stay a Believer, an exhibition that brings together a cross-generational group of artists, whose work is united by the use of the body to explore the social context in which their work was made. Working in media that ranges from painting, photography, sculpture, installation, and video, the artists included employ a variety of narrative strategies to position the body as a politicized entity. By addressing their present moment, as well as the histories that have shaped it, together the works provide an entry towards a deeper understanding of the experiences of others, and the complexities of our society.
